SENATOR SAWYER'S SHREWDNESS.

How a New York Team Driver Laid the Basis of a $2,000,000 Fortune.

Senator Sawyer, of Wisconsin, says a Washington correspondent of the New York Sun, is one of the shrewdest politicians in congress, and has had just the training to make him a hard fighter in a political campaign. Though born on the Vermont side of the lake, he was reared in New York City, where he spent all his early years. He received there an ordinary common school education, but stopped school early in life. He was, however, a self-supporting man. He regarded it as a piece of great good fortune when he was engaged by Messrs. Penfield & Hammond, lumber merchants, to take charge of their business in Wisconsin. Even on this salary he managed to live by several hundred dollars in the course of ten or twelve years, and in 1847 he took what he had and started for the west.

At about this time the government advertised a sale of extensive timber lands in Wisconsin territory. Young Sawyer, proffering by his experience with the lumbermen of New York, and his knowledge of the territory, picked out the most desirable lots and made memoranda of them. He then offered to give the benefit of his information to some New York speculators in return for a share in the profits, and his offer was accepted. Meanwhile speculators from Boston arrived on the ground and discovered what had been done. Knowing that his backers did not have the lands surveyed, he and his associates went to the surveyors and secured control of the best lands. Sawyer proposed to the Boston parties that they join him and his friends and share equally with him. But they decided that they would rather have a bare bone and have it to themselves than share with any body else. However it was too late for them to have the lands surveyed. Sawyer had done, and the only recourse was to wait.

The sale began about 11 o'clock in the day. Whenever a good lot was offered Sawyer put in his bid, which was immediately raised by some one else. Much to his indignation, some of the tracts on which he had most set his heart passed thus to the rival speculators. This happened so often that he could not fail to feel that he was being used as a very convenient cat's paw. He was, however, a self-supporting man. He regarded it as a piece of great good fortune when he was engaged by Messrs. Penfield & Hammond, lumber merchants, to take charge of their business in Wisconsin. Even on this salary he managed to live by several hundred dollars in the course of ten or twelve years, and in 1847 he took what he had and started for the west.

When the sale was reopened at 2 o'clock Sawyer had a friend fully instructed to bid in the choice lots while he left the enemy strayed.

"I know, when I heard that I've got to be very careful for fear of offending any one. I remember one day I was out riding in a street car, and when I got up to go out I struck accidently against the foot of a man who had his knees crossed and was blocking the passage way. The man had legs like a giraffe, was no thicker than a barber's pole, but sadder than any mule. Says he: 'You brute, I've a good mind to give you arrested.'"

"Don't do that, neighbor," says I, good naturedly.

"I want you to understand that you can't ruin my clothes," says he.

"Then I got out, and the next day I read in a newspaper that I had tried to rear a man's trousers off and cut a knife on the conductor because he interfered."

How many terrible aches one's poor head has, and what suffering is caused by these headaches.

A new invention, now being put on the market, is a headrest for travelers. It consists of plush cushion hung upon strong white wires, and so made that it fits over the top of the head back.

Upon this plushy cushion the tired traveler may rest his weary head without getting cramped in his bones and stopping the circulation in his veins, as is invariably the case when a man "scrooges" down into a chair, in order to rest the back of his head upon the upholstering. The contrivance can be taken apart in half a minute and packed away in a grip or coat pocket.

By this every traveler may carry his bed with him, and that without paying two or three dollars to a sleeping car company for the privilege of breathing the bad air of the sleeping car, and dreaming of his mother's feather pillows during a few unhappy hours of the night.

I am satisfied that Tongaline has done more good than any other medicine I have ever used.
